School Profile

At University of Chicago Lab Schools the rigorous standards are designed for bright and conscientious students who want to participate actively and work responsibly in an open, creative atmosphere. The goal is to graduate students who have the intellectual capacity to acquire, analyze, and communicate complex knowledge, and can use the methods of various disciplines to pose and solve problems for themselves. Students develop these skills through rigorous coursework, lively class discussions, and independent research and writing, relying on original source materials and multiple texts. U-High's demanding curriculum emphasizes analytical reading, writing, research, and strong mathematical skills.
